

BARCELONA TEMPORARY PAVILION

NEW OUTDOOR STRUCTURE FOR BARCELONA

INTERNATIONAL IDEAS COMPETITION OF ARCHITECTURE

ARCHITECTURE
WORKSHOP
IN ROME

A CITY ON THE SEA

Barcelona began life as a settlement on a gentle slope leading down to the sea, which allowed it to expand unimpeded.

The Llobregat and Besós rivers provided water, while the combination of mountains and the Mediterranean made for a wonderful climate.

However, the sea-level city had little to attract shipping, as it did not have a natural harbour like Genoa's Porto Vecchio or Marseille.

The coastal waters also generated a constant build-up of sand.

The coastal area needed protection and deeper waters to provide access for ships and goods.

The city's inhabitants understood the importance of having a port and battled to create one.

SITE AREA **

Site area is located inside of Port Vell. Port Vell is a waterfront harbor in Barcelona and part of the Port of Barcelona. It was built as part of an urban renewal program prior to the 1992 Barcelona Olympics. Before this, it was a run-down area of empty warehouses, railroad yards, and factories. Now it is a focal point of the city and tourists attraction, containing the Maremàgnum (a mall containing shops, a multiplex cinema, bars and restaurants), IMAX Port Vell and Europe's largest aquarium.

A pedestrian walkway, Rambla de Mar, connects La Rambla to Port Vell. It incorporates a swing bridge, in order to allow ships to enter and exit the harbor. This area represents a strategic point to place a temporary pavilion, which will be a functional area for tourism but also for the citizens of Barcelona.
